The book opens in FollettShelf

The screenshot displays the FollettShelf app interface. On the left is a dark blue sidebar with a white 'x' icon in the top right corner. The sidebar contains the following sections:

- Information: A green text block stating, "We've released an update to our iOS app for the BryteWave K-12 Edition reader that fixes issues with streaming audiobooks. eBook page turns have been improved and we now have support for Shared accounts within the app. Update your existing BryteWave K-12 E".

- Checkout Status: A message "You are reading online (The book is not checked out)." with a blue "Checkout" button below it.
- Features Supported: A list of supported features: "Dictionary - Supported", "Highlighting - Supported", and "Text View - Supported".

The main content area on the right shows the book's title "CONSERVATION AND ECOLOGY" at the top. Below it is a red bookmark icon with a white plus sign. The text of the book is displayed in two paragraphs:

Jane Lubchenco (1947–), an American environmental scientist and marine ecologist, became the first woman to serve as the administrator of the National Ocean and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) and as the undersecretary for oceans and atmosphere after a distinctive career devoted to environmental conservation and preservation. Raman Sukumar (1955–) is a noted Indian ecologist, renowned for his work with Asian elephants to prevent the extinction of the species, as well as his research on climate change, tropical forests, and wildlife conservation.

These extraordinary people—and many others—have been committed to the understanding of ecology and to the conservation of Earth's biodiversity. Through education and direct action, each one has performed the essential work of protecting species in crisis.
